- All players will be allowed the opportunity to develop.
- No player will sit a second time until all players have sat once. This should be continued into the next game through the season and not started over every game. Exception in Majors: Starting pitchers may remain in the game as pitcher even if all other players have sat an inning. - Players should be given the opportunity to play different positions and develop as all around players.
- All players will be given the opportunity to play the infield during regular season and playoff games (minimum two innings in a six inning game). All players will also play in the outfield at least one inning per game.
- All players should be given the opportunity for development as pitchers. An opportunity to pitch in games should be provided to all players who have the ability to throw strikes a majority of the time. Player safety should always be considered when electing to use a player as a pitcher.
- All players should have similar numbers of at-bats in the season (game attendance notwithstanding).
- Coaches must display good sportsmanship and team play at all times.
- Coaches must show support, respect, and cooperate with opposing players, coaches, umpires, spectators, and league officials.
